Case Study

Alexander Groß |
Günter & Partner ITK Solutions GmbH

The new Working Hours Act, which requires comprehensive electronic time tracking starting in 2026, was the primary trigger for rolling out Working. By integrating Working into the innovaphone myApps ecosystem, however, the legal requirement was transformed into genuine added value. The company achieved full legal certainty while simultaneously benefiting from more efficient processes and optimized workflows. Before the transition, time tracking at Günter & Partner relied entirely on manual paperwork. The approximately 20 employees recorded working hours, breaks, and project times on paper, while vacation requests were inconveniently submitted via email. Today, Working is used throughout the entire company. Employees can log their time flexibly from any location, whether at their office desk, from home, or on the go using smartphones and tablets. Mobile access is especially critical for the technical staff, who work on-site with customers nearly all the time.

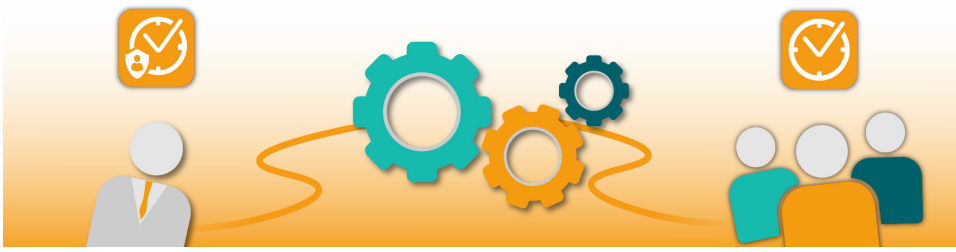

Seamless integration into the existing IT landscape was a top priority for the managing director Alexander Groß when selecting innovaphone Working. The app offers a transparent overview of the work hours for everyone involved. Its intuitive design also simplifies legally compliant documentation in daily business. "Whether it is time tracking, report evaluation, or quick vacation approvals, everything now runs transparently with just one click," says Alexander Groß. " This is exactly what pragmatic digitalization should look like. The partnership with innovaphone impressively proves that their slogan ‚more than communication' is not just an empty phrase. The Working module adds a crucial piece to our portfolio, offering our existing customers a truly comprehensive solution and opening up additional business opportunities for acquiring new customers."
